RESEARCH GUIDE

This Research Guide is intended for scholars interested in the relationship between architecture and politics. More specifically, it is focused on the use of architecture as a form of political communication.

Reflecting the interdisciplinary nature of this emerging field of study - that includes art history, architectural theory, political science and communication, modern media studies, and specific strands of journalism - this research guide includes books (edited volumes and monographs) that have been drawn from a number of disciplines. They are presented here in the form of a standard bibliography.
